Hazardous Weather

A slight risk of severe thunderstorms exists today, mainly for the South Plains.

Showers and storms may develop Saturday afternoon over northeastern New Mexico and the northwestern Panhandles and move southeast through the evening hours. Storms during the afternoon and evening may be severe, with large hail and damaging winds being the main concerns. Additionally, there will be a low, but greater than zero, tornado risk during the afternoon and early evening hours. Storms may persist into the nighttime hours as they approach the southeastern Panhandles.
